Vincent d'Indy's Lyrical Legend Sung in Paris

French Critics Praise New Work, One Calling It "Free, Pure Masterpiece."

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN AND NEW YORK HERALD, Copyright, 1920, by THE SUN AND NEW YORK HERALD.

PARIS, June 8.—Nothing since "Parsifal" evoked the laudation of the most formidable French music and dramatic critics as last night's premiere of "The Legend of St. Christopher" at the Opera. Both the poem and the music express the high artistic ability of the author-composer, Vincent d'Indy.

The work is essentially religious, with the theme embodying the difficulties of the quest for God. Not only was Mr. Ruhlmann, the orchestra director, acclaimed, but the singers were recognized and forced to respond to the plaudits with a certain respect.

The legend of St. Christopher was evidenced by the figures of the critic, who considers it the work of a new master, achieved in elevated symbolism and wonderful style. He says that "we have to-day found that which we have long wanted—a free and pure lyrical masterpiece."

CARUSO'S $500,000 IN JEWELS STOLEN

but the burglar had dodged around a corner of the house and fled across the lawn.

Meanwhile the alarm within the house had attracted the attention of the chauffeur, Fitzgerald, and he came hurrying out of the garage with his loaded revolver clutched in his hand. He ran toward the house, and as he came around a corner of the building he saw the burglar, with the clanging alarm box under his arm, running swiftly as he could across the lawn, making his way rapidly toward the public road. The chauffeur shouted at the man to halt, but the burglar, knowing that he had a fortune in jewels under his arm, paid no attention. The chauffeur then fired twice, but missed both times, although one of the shots may have clipped the burglar's sleeve.

All Traces of Burglar Lost.

Mrs. Benjamin and Mrs. Caruso hurried down the walk to the grounds of the cottage, and the chauffeur and several other servants followed. They organized searching parties. But even while this was being done the clang of the burglar alarm became fainter and fainter and finally ceased altogether. The burglar probably had stopped and disconnected the alarm. At any rate the chase failed, and without the ringing bells for a clue Fitzgerald and the other servants were unable to find any trace of the burglar.

Mrs. Benjamin and Mrs. Caruso sent word to the authorities of the burglary and then notified Mr. Benjamin, who said last night that the exact loss would not be known until inventories had disclosed what was in the safe. He said, however, that it probably would exceed a half million dollars rather than fall below that sum.

Immediately after the robbery Mrs. Caruso notified Sheriff John F. Kelly, at Riverhead, while Mr. Benjamin set the New York Police Department to work. Detectives from the East Sixty-seventh street station were sent at once to Eastamptown, where the burglary took place, and strong guards were placed to watch the Queensboro Bridge and other entrances to Manhattan and Brooklyn through which it was thought the burglar might try to make his way into the city.

Sheriff Kelly and Chief of Police Edward Morford of Easthampton began sending their deputies to various parts of the county in an endeavor to intercept the burglar, and other deputies in automobiles began moving swiftly in the neighborhood of the Caruso home searching for a trace of the thieves or some clue to their identity.
